TEACHING ACTIVITIES

Primary responsibilities include teaching in the first and second years of the School of Medicine curriculum (the Foundation Phase) through the Department of Social Medicine, and teaching courses for masters and Ph.D. students in the Gillings School of Global Public Health through the Department of Health Policy and Management, where I also supervise Ph.D. students. I am Co-Course Director for the Professional Development 1-3 course (encompassing PD1: Social Dimensions of Illness and Doctoring, PD2: Medical Ethics and the Health Care System, and PD3: Advanced Seminars in the Humanities and Social Sciences) that is part of the TEC curriculum. I previously taught health care policy to undergraduates at UNC, including classes in political science and public policy. I also served as Co-Course Director for the first-year School of Medicine course Medicine and Society from 2002-2007, and Course Director for Humanities and Social Sciences during 2011-2015. I continue to have primary responsibility for writing and coordinating PD1's health care reform exercise. As part of that exercise, I give an annual lecture to all first-year medical students about the uninsured and health care reform. In addition, I speak regularly about health policy issues at UNC to medical student groups, residents, and in courses in public health.
