SELECTED ADVOCACY

Immigration Detention Service Project: Together with clinical teaching fellows, organized and led week long service trips to immigration detention centers in Pennsylvania, held each year since 2016. The IDSP brings law students, undergraduates, law and social work faculty members, and alumni attorneys to work with detained asylum-seekers and their families, assisting them in preparing and presenting their asylum claims and in securing release from detention.

Wrote amicus brief on behalf of HIAS and other refugee organizations in Zepeda-Lopez v. Barr, filed with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on June 25, 2019, arguing that the Board of Immigration Appeals has adopted an unduly restrictive standard for determining when an individual with more than one nationality may qualify for asylum. The brief draws on my scholarly work on multiple nationality in U.S. and international refugee law.

Argued Vumi v. Gonzales, 502 F.3d 150 (2d Cir. 2007) in U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, a frequently-cited decision that established important principles for asylum claims involving persecution based on imputed political opinion or family membership.

Walker v. Lynch, 657 Fed. Appx. 45 (2d Cir 2016): In another case handled by the Asylum and Human Rights Clinic, the Court overturned an immigration judge's decision denying relief from removal under the Convention Against Torture to a gay man from Jamaica on the ground that the Jamaican government does not "acquiesce" to the widespread societal violence against LGBT people. The Court found that Jamaica's laws criminalizing homosexual conduct and police failures to investigate crimes against gay people are highly probative of government acquiescence.

Nderere v. Holder, 467 Fed. Appx. 56 (2d Cir. 2012): The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit relied on the Clinic's arguments to overturn the immigration agencies' refusal to consider circumstances of coercion and duress in assessing whether a drug offense is a "particularly serious crime" that bars an asylum applicant from obtaining relief from removal.

Coordinated advocacy efforts by mental health, civil rights and bar groups to reform bar admissions practices in Connecticut that discriminated based on disability. Litigated and negotiated consent decree in Szarlan v. Connecticut Bar Examining Committee, No. 3:94CV000160 (June 27, 1995), which eliminated a question that had required applicants to reveal all past mental health treatment. Drafted new court rules restricting the use of mental health information in the bar admissions process, adopted by the Connecticut judiciary in 2010, and served on working group convened by retired Connecticut Supreme Court Justice David Borden that recommended further reforms. Worked with American Bar Association's Commission on Disability to draft a resolution and report urging bar admission authorities nationwide to eliminate mental health questions, adopted at the ABA's Annual Meeting in August 2015. Assisted the U.S. Attorney's Office in its investigation of civil rights complaints against Connecticut Bar Examining Committee, which resulted in a 2019 resolution agreement that eliminated all mental health questions from the Connecticut bar application form and created new procedures to ensure non-discriminatory treatment of bar applicants with mental health or substance abuse treatment histories.

Litigated and negotiated consent decree in Pahaham and Rogers v. Danbury Police Department, No. 5:92CV00073 (D. Conn. Dec. 2, 1994), a case alleging systemic race discrimination in training and promotional opportunities. Consent decree established detailed training, special unit assignment and promotion procedures as safeguards against discrimination.

Wrote amicus curiae brief filed in Connecticut Supreme Court on behalf of the NAACP, NOW, and seven other civil rights organizations and unions in Angelsea Productions v. Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities, 674 A.2d 1300 (Ct. 1996), seeking reconsideration of a decision that adversely affected the due process rights of discrimination claimants, which was later overturned by legislation.

Headed Polygraph Project at the Legal Action Center of the City of New York, Inc., 1985-1988, which used litigation and legislative advocacy to combat employers' use of polygraph testing as a screening device, and contributed to the passage of the federal Polygraph Protection Act of 1988.
